

Global warming is a threat to plants. It is a threat to animals and humans. It is also a threat to entire islands and other costal areas. Rising ocean water can cover entire islands. This is a problem for people that live on these islands. They lose their homes. Their way of life is changes forever. This has already happened in India. The island of Lohacharia is underwater. This land was home to 10,000 people. Other islands may become covered with water soon. The problem of global warming is very real for these island residents.
